

Capital, Expectations, and the Market Process: Essays on the Theory of the Market Economy (Studies in Economic Theory)

This volume consists of seventeen of Ludwig Lachmann's most important papers published during the period 1940-73. Two of the articles appear here in translation for the first time. Prepared especially for this volume is a new essay about the present crisis in economic thought. Walter Grinders extended introduction analyzes Lachmann's scholarly career in four countries and his overall intellectual development.
