

Business in the Humane Society

How economic and social trends are persistently forcing and inducing business to serve the public interest and simultaneously to insure itself a position of added strength, profitability and leadership... Cold war, technological revolution, urban crises, spiraling unemployment, student revolt, rampant pollution of our environment - all have created a national hunger for a new and better society - a humane society in which life will become once more viable for the individual. In an effort to satisfy this hunger, government has gradually expanded its areas of interest and influence. Business too, by virtue of its size and power, is pressed to look beyond economic expedience in formulating goals and decisions and to consider public interest and national welfare - because in todays world (and even more so in tomorrows) PUBLIC interest and NATIONAL welfare are everymans interest and welfare, are in fact everymans bridge to survival. Therefore it is in the best interest of business to seek out ways in which it can contribute to social good and at the same time accomplish its own particular purposes. And that is what this book is about - a look at where we stand; a forecast of where we are headed; an evaluation of the role of government; and guidelines for business - how to achieve and how to operate within a new and beneficial coalition with government and the people. Responsible business leaders everywhere will welcome John Corsons clearly written, carefully reasoned analysis of the new social era we are entering and of the vitally important role they can play both in creating it and in participating successfully in it.
