Not illustrated. 1702 Excerpt: ... so macerated himself with Abstinence, that he could not bleed, and Poyson would have no Effect upon him 5 but at length entering a Bath, he was stifled by the Fumes, having according to his usual Elegancy, discoursed even to! the the last, of many excellent Precepts of Morality. After, him followed the polite and impure Petronius, one who had been a great Assistant to Nero in his extravagant Pleasures, and noted for his exquisite Art of heightning and refining a voluptuous Life. His Death seemed as luxurious as his Life, in which he proceeded with the least, imaginable Trouble and Concern, opening his Veins, and closing, them as he thought fit 5 discoursing with his Friends, not of serious Matters, or of a future State, but of light and pleasant Subjects, all the Time attending, to soft and tender Verses, and delicate amorous Songs. Besides these and innumerable others, dyd; the Empress Poppa her self, who being with Child and indisposed, Nero killd her with, a Kick with his Foot, for upbraiding him as he returned, Poppa late from driving his Chariot in publick. So that Nero daily became more and more insupportable to the City and Government. In the mean Time, the Apostle Paul proceeded daily in his Ministry 5: and having passed over from Asia into Macedonia, visited Philippi a fourth-Time, according to his Promise in his Epistle to that Church. Here he. stayed a considerable Space 5 and from hence, in all Probability, he wrote his first Epistle to Timothy, having promised to see him in a short Time 5 but Paul's best pleasure he thought he would be prevented, he gave him Instructions how to behave himself in his Office at Ephesus by Letter. 4 In which he laid down the Duties and Qualifications of a Bishop,
