

Bird-Bolts: Shots on the Wing (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Bird-Bolts: Shots on the Wing
As the promoter of immediate, even though transitory, happiness in a family, few things can be named that are more effective than the simple introduction into it of a playful kitten. Even where morals and religion fail outright, this always proves triumphantly successful. Tea time is over, for example. The husband is sitting, tired with his days work and silent, the wife equally wearied with hers, and the children begin to feel the situation decidedly oppressive. Presently, after a portentously, long-drawn sigh, six-year-old little Ellen is suddenly struck with a bright idea, and vanishes out of the room. A moment later and she is heard on the return, dangling something after her. It turns out to be a string, with a spool at the end of it, in whose wake, crouching, springing, all grace, life, and elasticity, is pussy.
