

The environmental objectives set out in Canada's Green Plan call for a 50 percent reduction of waste in Canada's national parks. This in-depth study of the waste issues in Jasper National Park looks at recent management practices, analyses park waste streams, and offers management options for the future. An attempt has been made to determine how much waste is generated in the park, who creates it, and what it consists of. The findings presented here have enabled the park to act decisively in establishing waste minimisation programs. While waste management in Jasper National Park presents some unique challenges, many of the practices discussed in this book will find broader application in other small communities across Canada. The book reaffirms the need for each community to define its own waste composition and to review the effectiveness of its current waste management practices.
