

The Gathering (Hansenville Book 2)

Sunday night worship service 1934 Two young girls sat between their daddy and their cousin Peter, playing handkerchief games to keep quiet. The bench was hard and they started to squirm, they came to attention when their Uncle Mayor Walter spoke from the pulpit. He shouted, Its too danged sad that the girls cant get the priesthood, but its even sadder that boys cant have babies! The girls looked at each other with wide eyes and covered their mouths with their hands to stifle their giggles. Peter looked down at them and grinned. Some day they will know and understand, he thought. Girls can grow up to be important people like famous actress Helen Hayes or First Lady Eleanor Roosevelt. They dont have to have the priesthood to do that. On the other hand; boys become daddies and can choose what kind of fathers they are to their children. His mind went back to a conversation he recently had with his father: Peter, you are young, but you are now the manager of our new store and that makes you one of the most prominent men in Hansenville. If you gather good people around you and show them how to behave, we will have a town full of people who believe in God and are governed by the Golden Rule. At that time he had thought, How can I ever meet that challenge? Today he was beginning to understand as he looked at the great examples around him. In side these pages you will find stories of men and women who gathered and helped Peter build a thriving community of citizens who loved God and who chose leaders who governed according to the Golden Rule. These are fictional stories filled with hate, and love, dishonesty and integrity, failure and success.
